Runge Head Office Relocates

Leading Mining Technology Company Runge Ltd (ASX Code: RUL) announces that it has relocated head office premises in Brisbane due to its continuing growth.

The company will initially occupy three levels at the newly built 333 Ann Street office building. With reception now on Level 12, 333 Ann Street, Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, 4000, all other contact details will remain the same.

The office caters for more than 150 staff and features open plan design, six boardrooms and large conference areas to cater for Runge's professional development training courses.

Over the past five years Runge's staff numbers have increased significantly from 83 to over 350 employees now working for the global business. This move occurs following Runge's successful listing on the ASX in May this year and recent announcement of a 45% increase in revenue during the past 12 months.

Managing Director, Tony Kinnane said that the new office will allow Runge enough space in Brisbane to meet the large company growth requirements related to new and existing project work and software development and sales.

"Runge's Brisbane team has been growing steadily and we had run out of useable space in our previous office in Central Plaza One. This new office environment has been carefully structured to suit our company's future growth plans."

The office fit out has been completed with a large consideration of Runge's unique culture.

Michael Scott, Human Resources Manager for Runge said "Runge's employees requested an office environment with good natural light and workstation modules which could be configured for team work and for project team break out areas. We have been able to achieve this and we have also been able to preserve spaces for employee social interaction."

Approximately ¼ of one floor is a dedicated staff area complete with recreation equipment. "This recreation area was developed in conjunction with employees to provide an area for employees to relax and interact with all teams" said Michael Scott.
